

trained voice. Just as perfect acoustics in a large hall or theater make audible the faintest sounds, so a well cultivated tone-quality invests a voice with an elasticity and carrying power which give to its most delicate nuances a clarity that is remarkable.

At times musicians object to my contentions on the ground that all my experience has been with great city parishes of unusual equipment. I should like to say that while I have been engaged during the greater part of my active musical career in city parishes, I have experimented even in country districts to discover the real value musically of ordinary every day boys. During the past season, I went at the request of a priest to a very small town in a farming district to gather the boys of his parish into a tentative choir. The very first examination revealed what I expected, namely sufficient material for a splendid choir.

And frequently during the last thirteen years I have been called upon to select the choristers for choirs in all types of parishes. I have yet to visit the parish (of course I exclude unusually poor parishes in districts where the people are scattered over many miles of country) that does not offer the raw material for a successful choir. Priests and musicians will find it if they search. The material is at hand; it awaits cultivation.

The objection that boys cannot be kept interested and in good discipline after the first novelty wears off is not substantial. Experience has disproven it thoroughly. If a high ideal of musicship is proposed to them and a sense of personal responsibility is inculcated early, there will be no difficulty in enlisting the enthusiastic co-operation of the lads.
